Another amusing slip took the form of unhappy after dluner speech. There s an entertainment given by an earl devedly popular. It was extremely handne, and champagne flowed freely. The ening was well advanced when a begnant old gentleman rose to propose a st. He spoke with fluency, but somew he said exactly the opposite to what meant. "I feel," said he, "that for a iln country squire like myself to address s learned company is indeed to cast rls before swine." Never was so sucsful a speech made. He could get no ther for many minutes. The company planded vociferously and as though they uld never cease.

My sweetest love, what time the night Hushes the rearing of the etreet, And Dian shows her elivery light-My sweet!

I sit me down and take a sheet Of paper, and I try to write A dainty love song, trim and nest.

I try until the dawn to bright, But still the verse is incomplete. Love can't be told in black and white,

THE NEW WOMAN.

"Oh, it puts me out of patiencei" sald Miss Lambton-Hyatt, with a fretful movement of her shoulders. "I'm sorry," said I, "but you look very well when you"- "Oh, that is just it," she broke in angrily. "We are to be put off with a compliment, as if one cared for looks or"- "Or dresses," said I, glancing at the pretty gown which showed beneath the opera cloak. She winced. "One must dress somehow," said Miss Lambton-Hyntt coldly. "Oh, yes, somehow," said I cheerfully. She regarded me with scorn and a little doubt. "Of course, you think you have me in a corner. But I could explain it all, "said she. "Yes?" I asked. "If I liked," she said, and looked indifferently out of the window. 'What station is this?'' she asked. "Oh, it's all right," I answered, and there was silence in the carriage for a space. "I wish you would see it in the proper way," she began presently, turning on me abruptly. "I will endeavor to," said I politely. "Pray explain." She frown-

ed. "Well," said she, "you must surely see that the evolution of woman is continuing. She has developed a great deal." "Of what?" I asked. "Of noth-Somerset, - - Kentucky. ing," she exclaimed impatiently. "Her position has developed, and she must have more freedom." "Freedom?" I asked inquiringly. "Yes, freedom to come and go, freedom to live her own life. What is the difference, pray, between man and woman?" "Why" - said I.

> "There are certain differences, certainly, " said Miss Lambton-Hyatt, hesitating, "but not the great distinctions that are vulgarly supposed. A woman has a mind, she has her own thoughts, and she ought to pursue her own career like a man. " "But marriago"-Y began. 'Poob | Marriage !' said she contempthously. "If she likes to marry, let her. So does a man, and it does not interfere with him." "Then a woman," said I, trying to understand, "should be as much like a man as may be?" Miss Lambton-Hyatt considered. "Ne." she said, "you put words into my mouth. I never said that." "Well?" I asked. 'She ought to be as independent as a man," said she triumphantly. She looked her triumph at me, and my eyes wandered ever her face, and to her hair and down agein to the rich silk of her

'Why do you look at me like that?" asked Miss Lambton-Hyatt irritably. "I was thinking" -- said L "Oh, yes," she interrupted, "you were thinking to be independent. That's what men are always thinking. It's their stock argument. Argument i" She laughed and turned to me again. "I put in practice my theories," she said deliberately and watching me for the effect of the thunderbolt. I started. "What do you mean?" I asked hastily. She nodded. 'I live my own life now, " said she. "Whose life did you"- But there I broke off, for Miss Lambton-Hyatt's handsome eyes were glittering. "Oh," I said foobly, "that is interesting!" "Do you think," she said, "that I am tied to a man's coattail like other girls?" 'No, indeed!' said I, shaking my head. "Do you think that I come and go at any one's beheet?" "No, no," I said, shaking my head more firmly. "Do you think that I would obey-well, you, for instance?" "Good gracious, no!" I said in haste. "Do you think"-"Certainly not," I broke in hurriedly. "See how free I am," she went on warmly, and throwing back her cloak in her enthusiasm she waved her long. white arms significantly about the carriage. "Yes, indeed," I said, looking at the arms. "Here I am, at 11:30 at night, returning from a solitary expedition to the theater-all alone." "I am here," I put in bashfully. She looked at me and frowned. "Oh, that is an weident," she said, "I met you." "A fortunate accident," I murmured. "What?" said Miss Lambton-Hyatt sharply. "For me," I added humbly. "Well," she said. "is it not far better to be quite independent like this than to be forever hanging upon some one else for what you want, like an encumbrance?" "Ever so much better," I assented quickly.

The train rolled out of the station. Suddenly I leaped to my feet and thrust down the window. "Good heavens!" I cried.

"What's the matter?" said Miss Lambton-Hyatt auxiously.

I pulled in my head, shut the window slowly and sat down opposite to her. "That was our station," I said. She looked at me in distress. "You don't mean' I nodded. "Unfortunately, yes."

She jumped up and pulled at the window frantically. "Please sit down," I said, "you can do no good now. The train can't possibly be stopped." She dropped into her seat, breathing hard. "What will happen?" she asked. 'Why''- said I. ''We shall have to get out at the next station?" she said, with a note of interrogation in her voice and some embarrassment in her manner

"This train does not stop for 20 miles," I explained. "Oh!" she cried. blanching. "It is the last trein," said SLEEPING AND DINING CARE I, "and there's no up troin before tomorrow morning." "Ohi" she cried again and stared at me, frightened. What shall we do?" she asked in low tones. I shrugged my shoulders. "It is a nuisance, isn't it?" said I calmly. 'Nuisance!' she said. "How can you take it so coolly? Oh, it's awfull It's reger Agt. Die. Preseager Agt. Traveling Pass. Af dreadful! I'- And she choked back a fingers on every hand and on every foot sob and gazed at me with a scared face. six toes, four and twenty in all." "We can't even let them know," I said.

"It's too late to telegraph." "Oh, Mr. Somerville," she cried brokenly, "what will they think?" "Perhaps they'll fancy you staid the night in town," I said soothingly. "Of course they're accustomed to your independent ways?" "How can yon?" she cried. "How unkind of you, when I am so- They'll think I'm killed!" "Oh, no," said I cheerfully, "you mustu't think that i" "But it's so horrible," she exclaimed tearfully, "to be here, right eway from every one!" "There's me," I seid. "Yes, yes; I'm so glad yon're here," she cried, staring restlessly about the carriage. "But-but-what must we do? Oh, do say something-de suggest something I'' "We shall have to put np at a hotel," said L "Hotel!" she exclaimed, looking at her dress and then at me. "But what will people think! What will' -- "Well, it's the some for me." said I nonchalantly. "Oh, but it's different with you!" she broke forth. How can you compare the two cases? You're a man, and"- "You're a woman," I finished for her.

She eyed me. "You are very unkind," she said tearfully. "You take advantage of me." "Indeed," I protested, "I will de exactly what you tell me. Only give me your instructions." She wrung her hands. "But I have none," she exclaimed. "I have no idea what to do.

I sat looking at her. "You might have seen what station it was and told me," she said presently in a reproachful voice. "I beg your pardon," said I apologetically, "but I was listening to you. You were so interesting in what you were saying about the independence"- "Oh, please don't!" said she. Her humiliation was so complete that I had not the heart to proceed, and I was silent The trein slackened, settled down to an easier pace and crept decorously into the station. We landed upon a desolate stretch of platform and stood miserably watching the lights go out.

"Well, here we are," said I cheerfully as darkness slowly enveloped as. Miss Lambton-Hyatt burst into tears. I entreated her, I coaxed her, I comforted her. If I remember, I took her hand in mine. She was a pitiful little figure, with her weeping face above the gay beauty of her gown. "Oh, whut shall I do?" she mound piteously. "Don't leave me," she wailed, and held me tight. "Stay," said I, "we will see what can be done."

I found the stetion master going to bed and conferred with him. Then I returned, and Miss Lambton-Hyatt olutched nie. "Don't leave me again," she implored. "This darkness and loneliness are so horrible." "Oh, it's all right," I said. "There's a sort of milk train passing up in ten minutes or so. " Her eyes opened and shome even in the darkness. 'We will go up in it," I added reasuringly. "And we shall get back?" she cried eagerly. "By 1 or thereabouts," I answered. "That's not so very late," she remarked

She sighed with relief and dropped my hand. There was a little pause, and then she turned to me. "Thank yeu very much, Mr. Somerville," said she.

We spoke little till the train came, but as the engine came pufflug through Miss Lambton-Hyest eyed it with favor, end then, "It's a bother getting to bed so late," she remarked quite coolly. We made the journey in silence. I think we had both a good deal to reflect

"You will think," said Miss Lambton-Hvatt as I conducted her to her home, "that I have betrayed my sex."

I protested. 'No," said she peremptorily, "it is idle to deny it. I know what you are thinking." "In that case, of course," said I. "But you are wrong," said she frankly, turning upon her doorstep. "I have a latchkey," she explained. "Of conrse," I assented. "No; you are wrong," she repeated, lifting her fine eyes and regarding the white stars in philosophic beatitude. "No doubt," I agreed. "Yon see," went on Miss Lambton-llyatt, taking no heed of me, "our cases were quite different. You had no one to be auxious about you." "Not a soul," I said. "And then I was in evening dress, which is not suitable, andand rather embarrassing when "- "Certainly," I said promptly, "The cases are quite different, and if I had been in evening dress, and, still more, if I had had some one to be auxious about me, I should"- "Yes, Mr. Somerville, just as much as I was," she said firmly. "Well, now," said 1, "why not let us put the cases square?" "What do you mean?" she asked, looking puzzled. 'Why,' said I, "give me some one to be anxious about me." "You can't invent people like that," she replied, and turning her back on me put the key in the latch. "Stop!" I called. "Don't turn that i" She faced me indignantly. "What right"— she exclaimed. I seized her hand—the one with the key. "Answer me," I said anthoritatively. "Will you square the cases?"

A flood of color surged ever her face. 'Shouldn't I be increasing my own responsibilities very much?" she asked, with a little, low laugh. "Oh, I will take those i" I answered, pulling her closet. - H. B. Marriott-Watson in New Budget.

FRESERVATION OF FORESTS.

An Important Statement From the Secretary of Agriculture. "I do not know any subject more important than the subject of forestry and the preservation of tree life," said Mr. Morton, the secretary of ugriculture, to a Boston Hernld correspondent. "I think that it should be taught in all the schools. Forests are an absolute necessity for the maintenance of human life. The whole animal kingdom would perish from the earth if plant life and growth were intermitted for a single summer. The assaults on the forests of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesotastates which furnish one-third the total lumber product of the Union-are shown by the recent census investigations to be in the nature of organized extermination. The census bulletin which I read some time ago stated that at the present rate of consumption by the lumber mills of those tiree states the quantity of timber owned by them would not last more than four or five years. This is a most serious, a most vital matter.

"We must preserve the forests if we are to avoid the long drought, the dreuching and disastrous floods and the tornado and the cyclone. Only 10 per cent of the globe's surface is covered now with forests. Twenty-five per cent of Enrope is so covered. Russia has 426,000,000 acres of forest; the United States, 466,-000,000 acres; Brazil, 135,000,000 acres. There are only 1,308,000,000 acres of forests in the world. The forests of Russin are steadily diminishing with the increase of population, and particularly with the emancipation of the serfs. Russia is clearing 7,000,000 acres yearly. The czar nione has 27,000 wood police in the crown forests who cut 150 fugots, or 134 tons of wood, mostly firewood, daily. The average per policeman yearly is valued at $219.

"France gets a part of her wood supply from Germany. France has increased her own forests in the last 40 years steadily. She has 7,000,000 acres more now than she had in 1848. In that interval 9,000,000 acres of waste mountain lands have been planted. The government of France has planted largely in Algeria. In Germany the reproduction of the forests is studied as a science. There are forest academies there for the education of forest managers. Eventually there must be more attention given to forest culture in the United States."

Particulars of Japan's Court.

Some interesting particulars concerning the court of Japan ere given by a writer in Lo Revue des Revues, who has recently been on a visit to Tokyo. The Emperor Mutsu-Hito has powerfully contributed to the introduction of European manners and customs among his people, and in this he has been cordially seconded by the Empress Hove Sanin, to whom he was married in 1869. Only two years after their marriage she allowed herself to be drawn through the open carriage, which followed one in which her husband was seated, and in 1890 she positively dared to sit side by side with her husband in the same carringe. Considering that former empresses were never nuder any circumstances allowed to brave the public gaze, the amount of courage necessary to accomplish such a feat was considerable.

The empress formerly wore the Japancse national costume, but she now dresses like a fashiouable lady from Paris or London. The adoption of the European costume, however, was no easy matter, for no one of the rank of a dressmaker was allowed to upproach the imperial person. The difficulty was got over by finding a young lady of the same height and build as her majesty, so that the process of being mensured could be gone through by proxy.

The Teeth of Elephants. "Wacever has looked inside an elephant's mouth has seen a strange sight, " said on elephant trainer. "Elephants have no front teeth, and they never eat flesh or any food that requires tearing produce it in England. npart. Eight teeth are all they have, two above and below on each side, huge yellow molars as wide as a man's hand and a comple of inches thick. Over these hay or fodder is shifted by the queerest, ugliest tongue in the whole nnimal kingdom, a tongue that is literally hung at both ends, having no power of movement except in the middle, where it shifts back and forth from side to side, arching up against the roof of the hig month like an immense wrinkling, pink serpent. There is nothing stranger than the working of an elephant's tongue, unless it be the working of his breathing apparatus when he sleeps. Elephants, like human beings, have two sets of teeth; the milk teeth, which are smaller than the permanent molars, fall out when the animals are about 14 years old. These baby teeth, which are nevertheless enormous, are occasionally pieked up by circus men among the fodder and preserved as curiosities. Such a thing as an elephant having the toothache or a decayed molar is absolutely unknown.

The Butcher's Compilment,

In modern jest books you may read this of a polite and complimentary tradesman: "This veal is not so white as usual, I think, butcher." "Put on your glove, madam, and you will not think so," answered the butcher, with a polite bow. Needless to say, the veal was bought without another word. This is only a variation of a passage in Drayton, written nearly 300 years ago: If thou but please to waike into the Pawne To buy thee Cambricke, Callico or Lawne.

If thou the whiteness of the same wouldst From thy more whiter Hand plucks off thy Gloue:

The elder Pitt liked Shakespeare, but not the labor of reading plays. He enjoyed hearing them and once said that he had learned more English history at the theater than at the university.

Shelley read with close attention all Christianity. He thought he was an atheist, but was mistaken, as there is not a more spiritual writer in our lunguage than he. He read the Bible with great care, and some of his finest imagery is borrowed from its pages. -St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Test. To the Editor of the Interior Journal. STANFORD, Oct. 26. - The final test of the pumping machinery and pipe lines of the water plant owned by the city of Danville was made by the consulting engineer, Mr. C. B. Davis, of Chicago, on the 17th and 18th and found to come up to all requirements. The water supply is obtained from Dix river and by use of ers clear and pure at all times. The nump house 74x33 feet is of broken rangwalls lined with red pressed brick, ceiling of yellow plne, a building to last as machinery, Nordling Corless Condensing teaching as before. Address Engines, direct connected to pumps, combined capacity 2,000,000 gallons per day, are in duplicate, especially designed to to give duty of 89,000,000 foot pounds for -Two little sous of John Conley living each 1,000 pounds dry steam and at time boilers each fully capable of supplying one engine are ample for efficient service. All steam pipes are covered to prevent lose of steam by radiation and the wnole, especially designed and equipped with view to economy in daily service, something frequently sacrificed to a few dollars in first cost.

The pipe line, nearly 11 miles, was tested to pressure of 120 pounds at 3d and Lexington streets without showing a single leak or flaw, something very rare. Stand pipe built by Wateon & Weidere, Chattanooga, Tenn., 150x16 feet, holds 225,000 gallons of water, which is pumpe l over a spray pan at top and drawn out at bottom, thereby assuring a perfect circulation and aeration of water. The stand pipe can be cut out and water pumped direct when desired. Fire streams from stand plpe pressure can be thrown over any building in town or to the gilt ball below weather vane on courthouse as shown by trial. As this is highest point the pressure in other parts ls greater. The whole system is amply supplied with suitable valors so that any side of a square can be cut out in emergency without hinderance to any other part of system. There are 96 fire hydrants so arranged that 10 to 14 streams can be thrown to any bullding in busi ness portion and not less than four on residence streets. As a whole the plant is strictly first-class, reflecting great credit upon Mesers. Howard, DeLong & Co., of Lexington, contractors for plant as a whole, and especially upon Mr. S. K. Felton, the genial, hard working superintendent for contractors and member of the firm, under whose personal supervision most of the work was done.

The city of Danville now has the most complete and best equipped water plant in the State. This is largely due to the efforts of the water committee: Messrs. H. E. Woolfolk, chalrman, G. W. Welsh and B.O. Rodes, to whom the writer is indebted for many courtesies shown dur ing period of connection with the city
